v.	)	PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION
BOARD OF ELECTIONS, et. al,	)

Defendant.	)

Seventy-five (75) challenged voters (hereinafter Petitioners) are asking this Court for preliminary injunctive relief from the decision-making process of a government agency before the agency has issued its final decision. Defendant Board of Elections (herinafter the Board) and Defendants in Intervention oppose the motion.

I. FACTS

On November 6, 1993, the Board of Elections (hereinafter the Board) conducted a general election for the Northern Mariana Islands. A voting poll was established for Election District No. 6 on the island of Rota and the polls remained open from 7:00 a.m.

1 until 7:00 p.m. During the election process, the Board received
2 167 voter challenges from District 6. After a preliminary review 3 of the challenges, the Board summarily dismissed 25 of the 4 challenges as frivolous. Next, the Board arranged hearings for 5 the remaining 142 challenged voters to begin on November 26, 1993.
6 Pursuant to section 9109 of the CNMI Administrative Procedure Act 7 (hereinafter the APA), the Board issued written notice of the 8 hearing on November 17, 1993. The written notice set forth 1 CMC 9 §6205(b)(1) (domiciliary and residency requirement) as the 10 specific ground for the voter challenges. The letter also 11 indicated that each challenged voter would have the opportunity to 12 present evidence that he or she is qualified to vote as a 13 domiciliary and resident of the CNMI, and as an actual resident of 14 Rota, factually living and having an abode on Rota. On November 15 26, and again on December 3, Petitioners filed two separate 16 motions to dismiss the challenges because of the Board's failure 17 to provide proper notice of the grounds for challenge and because 18 of the Board's failure to properly state a ground of challenge.
19 After the Board denied both motions, the Petitioners brought a 20 motion for preliminary injunction of the hearings before this 21 Court.

22 It is an undisputed fact that the Board received the written 23 challenges and proceeded to alter the grounds of the challenges to 24 some extent before commencing the hearing process. The Board 25 assesses its alteration of the original grounds as cosmetic.
26 However, the Petitioners consider the changes substantial and 27 contend that the Board has exceeded the scope of its authority and 28 thereby violated the Petitioners' right to vote and their right to

1 due process of law. Further, the Petitioners claim that this 2 Court must disrupt the Board's hearing process and judge the 3 procedural actions of the Board today in order to preserve
4 Petitioners' substantive rights.

6 II. ISSUES

7 (a) Can this Court assume jurisdiction over the Board of 8 Elections hearing process before the Board has reached a final 9 decision about the challenged votes of the Petitioners?

10
11 (b) If this Court could assume jurisdiction over this matter 12 during the early stages of an administrative hearing, would it be 13 proper to grant preliminary injunctive relief in light of the four 14 factor test for issuing injunctive relief?

15
16 III. ANALYSIS

17 A. RIPENESS

18 The Petitioners have requested preliminary injunctive relief 19 from the administrative hearing currently being conducted by the 20 Board. Before the Court can properly assess the merits of the 21 Petitioners' request it must have jurisdiction to hear the matter.
22 According to Bannercraft Clothing Co. v. Renegotiation Board, 466
23 F.2d 345, 351 (1972), even a forceful showing of pending
24 irreparable injury will not support an injunction if the trial 25 court has no jurisdiction to issue it or if the exhaustion of 26 administrative remedies doctrine precludes it. Id. Therefore, the 27 Court must assume jurisdiction and find the matter ripe for review 28 prior to a discussion on the merits.

1           Jurisdiction over the case at bar rests with this Court
2 because the APA grants this Court the power to review 3 administrative agency action. 1 CMC §9112(b). However, in 4 addition to showing a trial court has the naked power to act, the 5 petitioners must show that the case has reached a posture in which 6 judicial intervention would be effective and appropriate.
7 Bannercraft, at 354. This "ripeness" requirement includes a 8 showing that available administrative remedies have been 9 exhausted. Id. citing Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 58 10 S.Ct. 459 (1938). Section 9112(d) of the APA codifies the 11 exhaustion of administrative remedies doctrine and specifically 12 states that "[a] preliminary, procedural, or intermediate agency 13 action or ruling not directly reviewable is subject to review on 14 the review of the final agency action." 1 CMC §9112(d) (emphasis 15 added). The Court finds the Board's decision to alter the grounds 16 of the challenges to be a procedural decision. Therefore, absent 17 a showing that the action is "directly reviewable", this Court
18 cannot review the Board's procedural decision until the hearings 19 have ended and the Board reaches a final decision.

20           Bannercraft articulates an exception to the exhaustion of 21 administrative remedies doctrine allowing a trial court to act 22 prior to final agency action when an administrative agency's 23 intermediate action constitutes an ultra vires act or threatens 24 invasion of important substantive rights. The Petitioners claim 25 that the Board has exceeded its statutory authority and has 26 threatened Petitioners' due process rights as well as their rights 27 to vote. For reasons set forth in the following sections of this 28 decision, this Court finds the Board has neither acted ultra vires

1 nor violated Petitioners' substantive rights by altering the 2 grounds for challenge prior to the hearing.

4 B. STANDARD FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

5 Even if the Board's procedural decision was ripe for judicial 6 review prior to completion of the hearing, the Court could only 7 grant injunctive relief after an examination of the following four 8 factors:

9 (1) the significance of the threat of irreparable harm 10 to plaintiff if the injunction is not granted; (2) the 11 probability that plaintiff will succeed on the merits; 12 (3) the state of the balance between the harm the 13 petitioners will face if the injunction is denied 14 against the harm the respondents will face if the 15 injunction is granted; (4) the effect of the injunction 16 on the public interest.

17 King v. Saddleback Junior College Dist, 425 F.2d 426, 427 (9th 18 Cir. 1970).

19 Alternatively, a trial court may grant a preliminary 20 injunction if it finds that serious issues of law are presented 21 and that the petitioners will face much greater harm if the 22 injunction is denied than the respondents will if it is granted.
23 Marianas Public Land Trust v. Government of CNMI, 2 CR 999, 1002 24 (D.N.M.I. App. 1987) (citing Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm.
25 v. Nat'l Football League, 634 F.2d 1197, 1201 (9th Cir. 1980)).

26 1. IRREPARABLE HARM

27 The Petitioners allege three types of irreparable harm which 28 will result from a denial of injunctive relief. First, Petitioners claim their Constitutional right to due process of law has been violated by the Board's action. Second, the Petitioners argue that their individual rights to vote will be violated if the 1 Court denies preliminary injunctive relief. Third, the 2 Petitioners assert irreparable harm in the form of lost time at 3 work and extreme personal hardships resulting from the Board's 4 lengthy hearing process. The Court will address each alleged 5 hardship separately.

7 (a) Petitioners' Due Process Rights Were Not Violated. The 8 Petitioners give several reasons why the Board's action violates 9 their due process rights. First they claim that some of the 10 original letters of challenge did not state proper grounds for 11 challenging a voter under CNMI law because they mentioned the 12 wrong sections of the Commonwealth Code. However, the code
13 sections mentioned in the original challenges concern the domicile 14 of the voter, giving a reasonable person notice that the challenge 15 concerned domicile. Domicile is a proper ground for challenge, 16 and the notice given in the challenge is all the Constitution
17 requires. As our CNMI Supreme Court stated in In re San Nicolas,

18 technical rules of pleadings such as govern civil or 19 criminal actions are not applicable to [...] pleadings 20 filed with an administrative agency and liberality is to be indulged as to their form and substance.

21 In Re San Nicolas, No. 90-008 (N.M.I. Sept. 5, 1990). The Ninth 22 Circuit Court of Appeals reached a similar result in NLRB v.
23 Inter. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 827 F.2d 530, 534 (1987) 24 when it ruled that a labor complaint which failed to state the 25 unfair labor practice charge satisfied due process so long as the 26 parties were allowed to litigate the issues fully.

27 The Petitioners also complain that the Board issued new 28 notices to the challenged voters, changing the grounds of the challenge and violating Petitioners' right to an impartial

1 tribunal. However, the law is clear that an agency is allowed to 2 change the grounds for the initial complaint as long as the new 3 grounds are related to the original ones and as long as the 4 parties have notice of the new grounds. Two of the cases
5 mentioned by the Petitioners express this rule. NLRB v. Complas, 6 714 F.2d 729, 733-34 (7th Cir. 1983) (NLRB had authority to amend 7 unfair labor practices complaint to include unlawful 8 interrogations regarding union activities because the new charge 9 related to the original charge, but one day's notice was not 10 reasonable notice of the change); NLRB v. Tamper, 522 F.2d 781, 11 789-90 (4th Cir. 1975) (Administrative Law Judge may call attention 12 to an uncharged violation).

13 In the case at bar, the Board decided to substitute original 14 challenges filed under 1 CMC §§6201-6203, which refer to a 15 domicile requirement, with a uniform challenge filed under 1 CMC 16 §6205(b)(1) referring to a residency requirement. Thus, the 17 initial challenges related to domicile, and the amended challenges 18 relate to residency. "Residence means living in a particular 19 locality, but domicile means living in that locality with an 20 intent to make it a fixed and permanent home." BLACK'S LAW
21 DICTIONARY, 1176 (5th ed. 1979). The fact that BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 22 found it necessary to articulate a distinction between domicile 23 and residency demonstrates how closely related these grounds for 24 challenge are. The letters indicating the related grounds for 25 challenge were mailed on November 17, nine days prior to 26 commencement of hearings on November 26th. The Court considers 27 this notice timely given the close relationship between the 28 original and amended challenges and the fact that the Board faces

1 significant time constraints in its attempt to certify an election
2 prior to inauguration day. This is what the "due process" clause 3 of the Constitution and the Commonwealth's Administrative 4 Procedure Act require.

5 The Petitioners argue that 1 CMC §6104(g) stands for the 6 proposition that the Board cannot change the grounds of a 7 complaint once received from a challenger. Section 6104(g) grants
8 the Board the following power:

9 To promulgate rules and regulations pertaining to 10 procedures to be followed respecting the receipt,
11 investigation and action on the complaints of election
12 irregularities. 1 CMC §6104(g).

13 The Petitioners place great emphasis on the framers' use of 14 the word "receipt" claiming its presence in the statute bars the 15 Board from initiating a complaint. Memorandum and Points and 16 Authorities in Support of a Preliminary Injunction, at 24. While 17 the Court agrees with Petitioner's interpretation of §6104(g), the 18 Court does not construe the Board's activity in the case at bar as 19 the initiation of a complaint. Nor does this Court find that the 20 Board acted without having received a complaint. The Court finds 21 that the Board's November 17 letter changing the grounds 22 originally challenged constituted an interpretive reaction to the 23 receipt of seventy-five challenged votes. Thus, the Board did not 24 initiate the complaint. Rather, it classified the original 25 challenges filed by concerned citizens who understandably lack the 26 Board's knowledge of election challenges.

27 The Court finds that 1 CMC §6104 grants the Board the power 28 to promulgate a procedure allowing itself to make reasonable interpretations of otherwise confusing voter challenges it receives. To hold otherwise would force the Board to depend

1 solely on each challenger's ability to fill out the "grounds for 2 challenge" portion of a voter challenge form. Although some 3 challengers may be well-versed in the various basis for challenge 4 listed through Article 1, Division 6 of the Commonwealth Code, the 5 Court is convinced that many challengers either lack the language 6 skills or education levels necessary to articulate a technically 7 proper voter challenge. Petitioners interpretation of §6104 would 8 cause these potentially valid voter challenges to be thrown out.
9 Such a result frustrates the purpose of a voter challenge system 10 to ensure the integrity of elections.

11 Lastly, the Petitioners point to a Board of Election 12 adjudicative decision made in 1989. In the course of addressing 13 the merits of certain voter challenges, the Board decided that 14 "the challenger is bound to the grounds of his decision."
15 Petitioners claim that the Board, by deciding to change the 16 grounds of challenge in the case at bar, ignored their own rule 17 and thereby violated Petitioners' Constitutional right to due 18 process. However, according to the papers filed by the Board, 19 this part of its 1989 decision was not intended to do anything 20 more than deal with the specific case before it at that time. The 21 Court has no way of knowing whether that challenge involved facts 22 similar to those here.

23 Even if the Board 1989 decision created a rule, Petitioners' 24 due process claim ignores a fundamental difference between an 25 agency's regulations and its adjudicative decisions. By law
26 agencies are allowed to depart from earlier adjudicative 27 decisions. As one authority on administrative law stated, "the 28 administrator is expected to treat experience not as a jailer but

1 as a teacher." DAVIS, 2 ADMINISTRATIVE LAW TREATISE § 17.07 (1958); see 2 also Washington Water Power v. Idaho Public Utilities Comm., 617
3 P.2d 1242, 1254 (Idaho 1980) ("an agency must at all times be free
4 to take such steps as may be proper in the circumstances 5 irrespective of its past [adjudicative] decisions"). Thus, the 6 Board is allowed to depart from the holdings of past Board 7 decisions if it feels the circumstances warrant the departure.

8 For the reasons stated above, the Board's procedural decision 9 to change the original grounds for challenges it received from the 10 challengers did not violate Petitioners' Constitutional right to 11 due process.

12 (b) Petitioners' Voting Rights Are Not Threatened. Second, 13 petitioners claim that the right to vote will be taken from them 14 in the hearings. However, the point of the Board's hearings is to 15 ensure that the right to vote is exercised by people eligible to 16 do so. As this Court stated in King v. Board of Elections, No.
17 91-1191 (Super. Ct. Dec. 11, 1991), "a voter challenge system of 18 some type is necessary to ensure the integrity of elections."
19 Only if the Board's procedures are so flawed as to deny the 20 challenged voters their due process right will the hearings amount 21 to a deprivation of the right to vote. As shown above, the 22 Board's procedures do not violate due process. Therefore, 23 Petitioners' right to vote will not be lost in the hearing 24 process.

25 (c) Inconveniences Related to Hearing Do Not Violate Due 26 Process. Finally, the Petitioners argue that they will suffer 27 irreparable harm in the form of lost time at work and other 28 personal difficulties as the Board completes the hearing process.

1 Unfortunately, that kind of inconvenience is not something a court 2 can consider in deciding whether to grant a preliminary 3 injunction. As the United States Supreme Court stated in F.T.C.
4 v. Standard Oil Co., 101 S. Ct. 488, 495 (1980), having to 5 participate in these kinds of hearings is "part of the social 6 burden of living under government." Therefore, though some of the 7 petitioners will be seriously inconvenienced by participating in 8 the Board hearings, the Court cannot lend any weight to this type 9 of harm in deciding whether to grant the injunction.

10 Therefore, with respect to the ripeness issue, the Board's 11 actions neither threaten Petitioners' substantive rights nor 12 constitute ultra vires activity.

13
14 2. LIKELIHOOD OF SUCCESS ON MERITS.

15 As discussed above, the Court is unpersuaded by Petitioners'
16 arguments alleging irreparable harm. This general failure to show 17 irreparable harm at this stage makes success on the merits at 18 trial very unlikely.

19
20 3. BALANCE OF HARDSHIPS.

21 Because this Court does not believe the Petitioners are 22 likely to suffer the loss of any Constitutional right if the 23 Board's hearings are allowed to proceed, there will be no hardship 24 to them in denying the injunction. As stated above, their 25 inconvenience in participating in the Board's hearings is not the 26 type of hardship the Court can consider.

27
28

1     4. PUBLIC INTEREST.

2           Lastly, this Court must consider the public interest, which 3     in this case favors denying the injunction. First, there is a 4     public interest in allowing the Board of Elections to fulfill its 5     legislatively-mandated role, once the Court is satisfied that the 6     hearing process does not violate petitioners' due process rights.
7     As shown above, the Court is so satisfied.

8           Second, there is a strong public policy to be served by 9     allowing administrative agencies to reach final decisions on the 10    merits before a court steps in to review their work. Orderly 11    government requires that the courts not intrude into the day-to-12    day functions of the executive branch until the time is ripe to do 13    so.

14           The petitioners argue that the public interest requires this 15    Court to act now, so that the election results may be certified in 16    time for an orderly transition of government to take place, and so 17    that complex jurisdictional issues may be avoided later. The 18    Court does not agree that granting this injunction would 19    necessarily speed the final resolution of these voter challenges 20    or resolve jurisdictional questions. However, even if an 21    injunction would speed the certification process, the Court cannot 22    interfere with the challenge procedures set up by the legislature 23    just because they may be slow or involve complexities. As the 24    Commonwealth Supreme Court stated in Tenorio v. Superior Court, 1 25    N.M.I. 1, 18 (1980), the Superior Court cannot "substitute its 26    judgment for that of the agencies delegated by the legislature 27    [...] and by the Constitution [...] to legislate the matter."
28    Neither can the Court disrupt the established procedures because

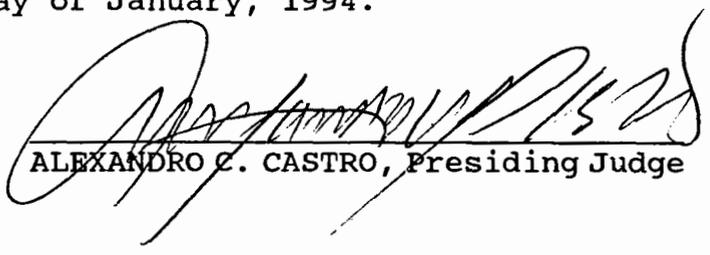

1 of the possibility that the petitioners' voting rights may be 2 violated by possible future governmental action. If some future 3 action by the Board violates either the petitioners' or the 4 candidates' constitutional or statutory rights, this Court will 5 remain available to provide appropriate remedies.

IV. CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the Court has found that the petition for preliminary injunction is not ripe for decision. Furthermore, the petition does not meet the stringent tests set forth by law for the granting of this kind of extraordinary, equitable relief and is therefore DENIED.

So ORDERED this 3 day of January, 1994.
